Sparse Methods for Radar Signal Processing

Randy Moses, The Ohio State University

Abstract

Sparse signal processing methods have seen a growth of recent interest and activity, both in techniques and in application domains. Sparse processing methods are well-suited to address some of the challenges in radar signal processing for both image reconstruction feature extraction. In this talk we will present some recent approaches to sparse processing techniques for radar systems, and we will discuss emerging opportunities.